Human resource & Tax alert

China clarified favorable Individual Income Tax treatments

Executive summary
The Ministry of Finance and the State Administration of Taxation (SAT) issued Caishui [2018] No. 164, which is a Notice focusing on several transitional rules concerning favorable individual income tax (“IIT”) treatments after the amendment of IIT Law (hereinafter referred to as “Circular 164”) on 27 December 2018. Circular 164 provides transitional rules on favorable tax treatment after the implementation of the new IIT Law, which will take effect from 1 January 2019. This alert aims to elaborate on the detailed contents and implications brought about by Circular 164.

<tr>
<td>Annual bonus (PRC tax residents)</td>
<td>Before 31 December 2021, as with the current treatment, not combined with consolidated income, annual bonuses will be divided by 12 to determine the applicable monthly tax rate and quick reckoning deduction: Tax liability = annual bonus income × applicable tax rate - quick reckoning deduction. Or they can be combined with consolidated income to compute tax liability.</td>
<td>Monthly tax rate table / Annual tax rate table for consolidated income</td>
<td>From 1 January 2022, annual bonuses shall be combined with other consolidated income received in a year to compute tax liability.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Equity income from listed companies (PRC tax residents earn income from eligible stock options, stock appreciation rights, restricted stocks, stock awards, etc.)</td>
<td>Before 31 December 2021, similar to the current treatment, not combined with consolidated income, use the applicable annual tax rate: Tax liability = equity income × applicable tax rate - quick reckoning deduction. Equity income received twice or more shall be aggregated to determine the applicable tax rate, compute tax liability and make a reconciliation.</td>
<td>Annual tax rate table for consolidated income</td>
<td>Relevant treatment after 1 January 2022 will be stipulated separately.</td>

<tr>
<td>Selling houses to employees at lower price</td>
<td>If companies sells residential properties to employees at a price lower than the actual purchase price or the actual construction costs, the difference shall not be combined with consolidated income, it will be divided by 12 to determine the applicable tax rate and quick deduction: Tax liability = the difference × applicable tax rate - quick reckoning deduction</td>
<td>Monthly tax rate table</td>
<td>No transition period is stipulated, and there should be no transitional period</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tax-exempt benefits for non-Chinese nationals (including foreign nationals, and citizens of Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan)</td>
<td>Non-Chinese nationals who qualify as PRC tax residents can choose to enjoy applicable specific additional tax deductions or the existing tax-exempt benefits including subsidies of housing, language training and children education, but they cannot enjoy both at the same time. Once selected, they cannot change it within a tax year. From 1 January 2022, tax-exempt benefits for subsidy of housing, language training and children education will no longer be available to non-Chinese nationals. They shall enjoy specific additional tax deductions</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The provisions relevant to the above favorable tax treatments in the prevailing tax regulations shall be abolished at the same time. Except for those specified in the above, other favorable IIT treatments shall continue to be effective based on relevant tax regulations.
Our observation

1. Tax-exempt benefits for non-Chinese nationals

1) During the three-year transition period, we expect that most non-Chinese nationals will choose to continue to enjoy the current tax-exempt benefits since the amount of specific additional tax deductions are quite low.

2) From 1 January 2022, tax-exempt benefits on subsidies of housing, language training and children’s education will no longer be available to non-Chinese nationals, and they can only claim the low specific additional tax deductions. Since housing rent and children’s education are very expensive in China, there will be significant impact on foreign investment enterprises and non-Chinese national employees. Under the same level of gross employment income and welfare, the IIT liability of these employees will significantly increase and their net after-tax income will decrease accordingly. If the employer would like to maintain the same level of the employees’ after-tax income, they need to raise the total gross income of the employees, and this will increase the company cost. Therefore, multinational companies need to pay attention to and analyze China IIT costs of their non-Chinese employees starting from 2022 and plan ahead. Literally speaking, the remaining tax-exempt benefits for non-Chinese nationals including meals and laundries, home leave and relocation may still be available after 2022, but attention needs to be paid as to whether there will be any changes on this point.

2. Annual bonus

Recently, a lot of attention is being paid to whether the favorable tax treatment on annual bonus will continue to be available or not from 2019. It is good news to taxpayers that it will still be available during the three-year transition period. However, it should be noted that it will not be available from 2022 and from then annual bonus shall be combined with consolidated income for IIT calculation purpose. It is not mentioned in the circular whether non-resident individuals can enjoy this favorable tax treatment.

3. Equity income from listed companies

Under the transitional rules, eligible equity income from listed companies received by PRC tax residents no longer need to be divided by the stipulated number of months to determine the applicable tax rate and quick reckoning deduction number, but apply annual tax rate table for consolidated income to compute tax liability. Equity income received by PRC tax residents twice or more in a year shall be aggregated to compute tax liability. This is very similar to the existing treatment. It is not mentioned in the circular whether non-resident individuals can enjoy this favorable tax treatment.

Next Steps

As withholding agents, companies need to become familiar with the relevant favorable tax treatments specified in the circular. If in doubt, please consult the local tax authorities. You are also welcome to contact EY professionals.
